An exhibit on the history of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians and their language and culture entitled “Understanding our Past, Shaping our Future” is now on display at the Jackson County Public Library in Sylva. “There’s such an emphasis on Cherokee culture and life and language within the community, but sometimes it wasn’t accurately conveyed so this idea came together of having an exhibit that brought a lot of ideas together and could be placed outside of the key cultural centers,” said Anna Fariello, exhibit curator. The exhibit has previously been on display at the Cherokee Central Schools, SCC, and WCU and travels next to the Swain County Center for the Arts in Bryson City.

EBCI Air Quality Program to give away free test kits

By AMBLE SMOKER
ONE FEATHER STAFF

Radon, a radioactive gas that is both odorless and colorless, could be invading the air inside your home and accumulating towards lethal levels. This radioactive gas is the leading cause of lung cancer among people who do not smoke and second for those who do. The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) estimates Radon is responsible for more than 20,000 deaths from lung cancer annually.

Found all over the US, the radioactive gas is derived from the natural decay of uranium in soil and rock while emitting toxic vapors into the atmosphere, severely diminishing the quality of air you breathe. The lung-cancer causing agent is found in every type of building without discrimination between new or old and most commonly found in homes, offices and schools. Without detection and proper prevention efforts, Radon levels can accumulate to unsafe levels with harsh consequences.

Katie Tiger, EBCI Air Quality Program states, “Many areas in North Carolina have been identified to have elevated levels of radon, especially in the mountains and piedmont regions. In fact, radon levels can vary from home to home. Even homes next door to each other can have very different radon levels.”

Amy Smoker adds, “Radon levels are highly site specific and the only way to know the radon level in home is to do a radon test.”

Although radon poses a very serious health risk, it can be easily reduced and is very cost-effective to do so. The Air Quality Program recommends all homes should be tested for radon gas, whether they are new or old. Testing is easy and the only sure way to determine if your family is at risk for radon. If your house has a radon problem, it can be fixed and will greatly reduce the risk of lung cancer for you and your family.

The EBCI Air Quality Program will be giving away free Radon Test Kits to anyone who resides on EBCI land. The test kits only take a few minutes to set up and will run for 3-7 days. They can be picked up on the following days and locations:
- Tuesday, Jan. 28 from 10:30-11:30am at the Cherokee County Senior Center
- Wednesday, Jan. 29 from 10:30-11:30am at the Snowbird Senior Center
- Thursday, Jan. 30 from 10:30-11:30am at Tsali Manor and from 2-4pm in the Ginger Lynn Welch Community Room

Shan Goshorn is an artist who thinks outside of the box...or rather, she thinks outside of the basket. The EBCI tribal member, who currently resides in Tulsa, Okla., is one of 16 American Indian artists selected for the 2014 Native Arts and Cultures Foundation (NACF) Artist Fellowships.

“It is a great honor for me to receive the 2014 NACF Artist Fellowship in the Traditional Arts category,” she said. “As a professional artist who has supported myself for over 30 years with my art, I know first-hand of the challenge to remain creative and true to your craft while trying to pay all the bills.”

Goshorn will receive $10,000 for the Fellowship which will allow her to return to the National Museum of the American Indian in March and April to complete her study of historical Cherokee baskets and photographs in the collection. This will help her finish the work she started as part of her Smithsonian Artist Research Fellowship.

During her time there, she has examined many historical baskets and photographs and that study has led to influences in her own work. After examining an historical Cherokee gambling basket, she constructed one woven out of splints emblazoned with the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act. “The paper splints have a metallic gold and copper wash added to them to reinforce the tremendous exchange of money as a result of casinos,” she commented.

Goshorn said she has been influenced by many artists and basket makers over the years and added that the late Goingback Chiltoskey was one of her biggest and earliest influences. “He would carve or sculpt whatever he felt like creating and when it was finished, he would call the first number on the list and offer the work for sale. If that first person/gallery/museum chose not to purchase the piece, he would call the next contact on the list. I was amazed that he never had to make very many calls – his work was in such demand that it always sold.”

“I envied that freedom – to be able to create whatever he wanted and know that he would be able to make his living. That sense of freedom is exactly what the NACF Artist Fellowship affords native artists today. It allows us to experiment and explore new ideas without a sense of financial panic. I believe this to be particularly valuable in tribal communities because indigenous art is often overlooked in museums and galleries, deemed primitive or less valuable than ‘mainstream art’.

Goshorn is joined by the following artists as a 2014 NACF Artist Fellow:
- Keola Beamer (Native Hawaiian), music
- Raven Chacon (Navajo), music
- Eddie Chuculate (Muscogee Creek/Cherokee), literature
- Kaill Chun (Native Hawaiian), visual arts
- Santee Frazier (Cherokee Nation), literature
- Jeremy Frey (Passamaquoddy), traditional arts
- Melissa Henry (Navajo), film
- Micah Kamohoali‘i (Native Hawaiian), dance
- Billy Luther (Navajo/Hopi/Laguna), film
- Patrick Makuakane (Native Hawaiian), dance
- Nora Naranjo-Morse (Tewa/Santa Clara Pueblo), visual arts
- Da-ka-xeen Mehner (Tlingit/N’ishga), visual arts
- Israel Shotridge (Tlingit), traditional arts
- Brooke Swaney (Blackfeet/Salish), film
- David Treuer (Ojibwe), literature

“It is our honor to present a dynamic new cohort of NACF Artist Fellows for 2014,” commented Reuben Roqueni, NACF program director. “Native artists are taking leadership in addressing critical issues across the country and act as catalysts for change in our communities. The fellowships support these artists as they delve deeper into their practices and cultivate their artist voices to transport and inspire us.”

Goshorn added, “Art has the power to persuade, to inspire and to express an entire culture. Without our arts, our culture cannot survive.”

The Cherokee Children's Home was established in 1969 and has been the permanent or temporary home for over 1,700 Cherokee youth over the years. Currently, a new $2.6 million facility is being built on 28 acres located on Goose Creek Road in the Birdtown Community.

The Cherokee Preservation Foundation gave a $200,000 donation to the Home on Tuesday, Jan. 14. The Cherokee Boys Club has raised over $200,000 in the past year, and Tuesday’s donation represents a match of that amount.

“We are interested in the green components of the project, the LEED-certified components that are going in and also the fundraising capacity-building for the organization,” said Annette Saunooke Clapsaddle, Cherokee Preservation Foundation executive director. “We did a $40,000 grant on the front to help them with the planning and the green components they are using.”

“We gave them $200,000 for the green energy components, and then once they started their campaign and raised well over $200,000, that’s the match for the amount we agreed to match.”

Cris Weatherford, Cherokee Children’s Home director, related, “The first phase of our project is building the first house which includes our administrative space as well as space for all of the children and staff. It is a little over 8,000 square foot, and it’s going to include all of that plus a basement which will be the recreational space for the kids. That’s about a $1.2 million project so this donation takes a large bite out of that.”

He said the existing facility is around 3,500 square feet and was constructed pre-building code and pre-licensing code. “It’ll be nice to have a new facility.”

The new facility will consist of two cottages, each with nine beds and other amenities.

Tommy Lambert, Cherokee Boys Club general manager, said the infrastructure work at the construction site has been done by Tribal Construction at a huge savings. “Our original estimate for infrastructure work was $380,000. Tribal Construction did all of our infrastructure work for a little over $60,000 and saved us a tremendous amount of money.”

Lambert said the contract for the construction of the new Home is 285 days with some extra days built in for adverse weather, but he said he has no doubt the facility will be finished in under a year.

DENVER, Colo. - Since 1977, the American Indian Science and Engineering Society (AISES) has worked to substantially increase American Indian and Alaska Native representation in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) fields — as students, professionals, mentors, and leaders.

The AISES National Conference is a one-of-a-kind, three day event convening graduate, undergraduate, and high school junior and senior students, teachers, workforce professionals, corporate and government partners and all members of the AISES family.

The 35th annual conference in Denver, Colo. included representatives from the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians - Alicia Jacobs, director of the Jones-Bowman Leadership Award Program, six Jones-Bowman Fellows and Daniel Martin, programmer for the Cherokee Preservation Foundation.

“My goal was to make new connections and arrange for Kelsey Owle to start a chapter at the Cherokee Central Schools. I also wanted to attend sessions that would be beneficial for me as I lead the Jones-Bowman program,” said Jacobs.

The AISES National conference has become the premier event for Native American Science, Engineering & Math (STEM) professionals and students and attracts over 1,600 attendees from across the country.

“I was fortunate to attend the AISES conference through the help of the Jones-Bowman Leadership Award Program. I had a wonderful experience while there and learned valuable information on how to start a chapter at Cherokee Central Schools,” said Owle.

The conference provides social & professional networking, mentoring, research and nationally recognized speakers. It also offers thought-provoking discussions on important current STEM issues, as well as excellent career resources and traditional cultural activities.

Jones-Bowman Fellow Kayla Smith said, “While at the conference, I attended the career fair which offers a wide variety of colleges and businesses looking for Native American students who are interested in jobs, internships, and graduate schools. The career fair was helpful for me in planning my future for the betterment of my tribe and myself.”

In addition to the professional development tracks and workshops, the national conference provides opportunities to showcase academic research and study as well as connections to graduate, internship, fellowship and career opportunity.

“The AISES conference was a great opportunity to see all of the resources that are out there for Native American college students. I really enjoyed the career fair and exploring all the different graduate programs available to me after graduation,” said Jones-Bowman Fellow, Savannah Hicks.

Dakota Brown, another Jones-Bowman Fellow, agreed. “It was great to be able to see so many other Native American students gathered in one place. The highlight of the conference was the career fair, where I was able to meet many different professionals, make connections and learn about possible internships for the future,” she said.

The AISES conference offers a sense of community and provides a unique perspective on how native tradition and STEM can be effectively bridged in the 21st century.

Carmen Johnson, a Jones-Bowman Fellow and 2016 graduate of Duke University, said, “The 2013 AISES conference provided me with the opportunity to meet other Native Americans from across the country who are involved in scientific STEM fields. The conference empowers Native communities across the US to pursue analytical careers and helps unify, encourage, and elevate students to reach their full potential in these challenging fields of study.”

Over 200 tribal nations are represented within AISES. Through the quality and reach of its programs and the longevity and devoted commitment of its family, AISES is the leader in STEM opportunity in Indian Country.

“We were able to meet people from Google and NASA and other people looking to hire and have an internship with them. We also met some people from Cherokee nation who were very helpful and offered us an internship and job if we wanted one. Over all, I came away motivated and encouraged,” said Tim Calhoun, an attending Jones-Bowman Fellow.

“It was great to see the Fellows enthusiasm to lead in Region 7 of this conference. Within the next few months the attending Fellows plan to travel to NC State to vote on this region’s AISES leader, along with Dakota Brown who is wanting to start another chapter at WCU,” said Jacobs.

Harrah's Cherokee Casino Resort won $10,000 from the Caesars Foundation to be donated to the local American Cancer Society - Making Strides Walk based on the property's efforts to bring breast cancer awareness to its employees.

The Caesars Foundation breast cancer awareness contest was a competition among all North American Caesars casinos to identify the property that had the most employee participation in breast cancer awareness events during October. Along with recognizing the month of October as Breast Cancer Awareness Month, Harrah's Cherokee hosted an entire Pink Week entitled 'Treasure Your Chest' to educate employees and guests about breast cancer. Contest points were awarded in several different categories including employee participation in a Beautiful Bra Pageant, volunteer opportunities, and media exposure. After the final tally, Harrah's Cherokee reigned supreme over 47 Caesars properties.

"Here at Harrah's Cherokee, we encourage wellness among our employees and guests because it's the right thing to do," Darlene Ousley, Harrah's Cherokee wellness coach, said. "Our wellness goal is always to find that one person who needed to be reached and didn't even know it. Whether it's breast cancer, heart disease, or diabetes - we are always reaching out for that one."

'Treasure Your Chest' was Harrah's Cherokee's third annual Pink Week event. From learning about breast self-exams on Mammogram Monday to participating in a remembrance walk, 'Treasure Your Chest' brought awareness to employees and guests about breast cancer. Harrah's Cherokee senior leadership even strutted on stage in bras decorated by employees at the Beautiful Bra Contest in the Essence Lounge. Employees had the difficult task of voting for their favorite of 36 bras.

Everything from a Barbie to a Beanie Baby adorned the cups of bras. The Beautiful Bra Pageant was the grand finale of 'Treasure Your Chest.'

"It is sometimes difficult to create a fun atmosphere around breast cancer awareness, but our employees have a blast every October during our Pink Week events," Harrah's Cherokee Casino Resort vice president of human resources and external relations Jo Blaylock said. "Our commitment to breast cancer awareness is one of many ways we show how much we care for the wellbeing of our employees and guests. The corporate recognition is just one more reason that Harrah's Cherokee really is the best place to work."

The local American Cancer Society chapter will use the donation for research and to provide programs and services to Western North Carolina residents.

To date, Caesars Entertainment Corporation, its properties, and the Caesars Foundation have contributed more than $3.5 million to cancer-related organizations through cash and in-kind donations. Caesars also supports numerous fundraising activities for the Susan G. Komen Race for the Cure and other cancer research organizations.

New Year’s Blessing

By SHAWN SPRUCE

Upon returning to Cherokee from a business trip late one evening last summer, my girlfriend gave me a small box wrapped in simple white paper. Expecting a book or some other ordinary gift I opened it without much thought. Inside, I discovered only a smooth white plastic stick laid neatly on a piece of cotton. Printed on one end were three purple letters “EPT.” It took me a moment to snap.

Brooke and I had been trying to conceive for nearly a year and were almost to the point of worry. We were thrilled beyond words, but decided to keep quiet for a few months, happily sharing our little secret from family and friends.

Two weeks later, I received an email from a retired nurse I know in Albuquerque who had worked with my late father many years ago while he completed a residency in obstetrics and gynecology. A former colleague had sent an old photo of him which she wanted to forward. My dad died young, still in his thirties, but one accomplishment that I’m especially proud of is that he was the first Pueblo Indian medical doctor. Another is that he delivered me when I was born.

The picture was one I had never seen before, taken while my dad was on call wearing scrubs, a neck tie, and a warm smile. I was awestruck by the timing instantly thinking to myself: “He knows. He knows and he is happy”.

But, there was something more. A closer look at the scanned image on my phone revealed a handsome young doctor leaning casually against a desk. Hands folded on his lap, the man exuded a calm, cool confidence. It seemed almost as though he was reassuring Brooke and I that he would be there for our family just as he had been there for his family more than 40 years ago.

Our daughter was due March 8. On New Year’s Eve, I drove Brooke to the OB in Sylva for a routine afternoon appointment. Along the way, we made plans for a relaxing evening at home watching the ball drop and munching popcorn. Little did we know what New Year’s 2014 had in store.

We were told in December that our pregnancy might not go full term; nothing incredibly alarming just an issue with Brooke’s blood pressure that might require induction of labor a few weeks early. She was monitored closely though and the condition was under control.

But, in Sylva we learned things had changed. For although she felt fine, Brooke’s blood pressure had now become dangerously elevated, creating a serious condition in pregnancy known as preeclampsia. Left unchecked the illness poses tremendous risks to mother and baby possibly resulting in seizures, cerebral hemorrhage, even death.

Brooke was admitted to Harris Regional Hospital for observation at 4 pm. Doctors explained that if they could get her blood pressure under control she could probably go home the next morning. But, after three hours of bed rest and medication with no effect, Brooke was taken to Mission Memorial Hospital in Asheville, western North Carolina’s only neonatal intensive care unit.

Here, doctors again tried to curb her blood pressure which had spiked even more during the ambulance ride. At 11:30pm, blood pressure still soaring, we were told the baby needed to be delivered immediately. By this time, Brooke’s sisters had arrived from Cherokee. Brooke’s parents were three states away on business, unable to make it home on such short notice but calling every few minutes for updates.

A team of medical staff descended upon us. They explained the procedure and its risks, and began preparing Brooke for surgery. At one point an anesthesia tech shook my hand and wished me Happy New Year. I glanced at a
The clock on the wall. The time was 12:10 am. We were given a few minutes to pray as a family before Brooke was wheeled away to the delivery room.

We welcomed our beautiful daughter, Celeste Shawna Spruce, into the world at 1:12 am on New Year’s Day. The delivery went extremely well for both mother and baby. Born nine and-a-half weeks premature, a nurse described our baby girl as “tiny, but mighty.”

I was told by a number of people “You’ll cry the first time you see your newborn child. All men do.” But, I didn’t. Not in the delivery room, not following the nurses to the NICU, not later watching her sleep safely in an isolette, a tangle of small wires and tubes keeping her fragile body alive.

At 8am, Brooke was moved downstairs from Labor and Delivery to the Mother Baby Floor. Along the way nurses made a brief stop in the NICU so that Brooke could hold our baby for the first time. As I watched her finally take her newborn daughter, squirming and sobbing, into her arms and tenderly kiss her delicate round nose, I felt a tear roll down my cheek.

Nearly two weeks later and our young daughter is doing amazingly well. She’s breathing unassisted, taking more food each day, and we’re hoping she’ll be home in time for Valentine’s Day. Doctors are also confident she will grow into a perfectly healthy and happy child. Moreover, Brooke is making a full recovery too. Meanwhile, it’s interesting to note that Brooke herself was a preemie baby. A fact I’m reminded of every Nov. 17, World Prematurity Day, when Brooke makes sure I wear something purple. Born at 28 weeks, she weighed a mere one pound and eleven ounces. Even more ironic, she spent two and a half months in the very same Asheville NICU as our daughter. We even had the opportunity to meet one of the doctors who cared for her 30 years ago and still works at Mission today.

In closing, Celeste, Brooke, and I would very much like to acknowledge all of our friends and family who have shown such a huge outpouring of love and support though out our ordeal. The entire staff at Mission Hospital has been wonderful along with our primary care doctors at Smokey Mountain OB and of course the great people at Cherokee Indian Hospital. I’d also personally like to thank the entire community of Cherokee, North Carolina. I first came here five years ago for my work, never imagining that Cherokee would become my home. Since that time, I’ve made countless friends, shared many priceless experiences, and been privileged to serve such a remarkable and outstanding nation of people. Brooke and I now look forward to raising a strong Native woman who will represent her Eastern Band people here and the Laguna Pueblo, where I am from, with dignity, self-respect, and character.

Celeste Shawna Spruce was born Jan. 1, 2014 to excited parents Ashley Brooke Brown and Shawn Spruce. She tipped the scales at a whopping three pounds and three ounces, stretching sixteen inches from head to toe. Her proud family includes Alisi Sandra and Ududu Diamond Brown Jr. of Snowbird Community; aunts Dakota Brown and Wahlalah Brown, also of Snowbird; aunt and uncle Roxane and Raymond Bly, of Albuquerque, NM; adopted grandma, Magoo Shoulderblade of Lame Deer, MT; and last, but not least, grandfather, the late Dr. Beryl Blue Spruce.

Friends of the Smokies receives grant for tracking, monitoring elk

Friends of the Smokies has received a grant for $13,720 from Charter Communications, Inc. for support of wildlife management in Great Smoky Mountains National Park. The grant provides for the purchase of 15 radio collars and 2 receivers for tracking and monitoring elk throughout the Park.

Two hundred years ago, elk roamed the southern Appalachian mountains and elsewhere in the eastern United States. With the financial and in-kind support from the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, Friends of the Smokies, Great Smoky Mountains Association and the University of Tennessee; the Park began reintroducing elk in Cataloochee Valley in 2001. Initially, all elk were fitted with radio collars allowing biologists to efficiently monitor the growth, survival, and movements of the population. As the elk herd grows, today numbering at least 120 animals, biologists continue to monitor a subset of the herd annually to monitor population dynamics particularly focusing on newborn calves and females. This donation helps provide much needed collars to fit the calves and five adult females per year along with any nuisance animals.

“Charter is a communications and technology company,” said Joe Pell, vice president and general manager for Charter’s operations in Louisiana and Tennessee. “Funding the radio telemetry that Park biologists use to ensure the elk’s success fits with our company’s focus.”

Radio-transmitters are one of the most useful instruments to help track animal locations and survival. This is true, not only for elk, but other wildlife species as well. Information gained from the use of radio telemetry equipment has been vital in making short and long-term management decisions regarding bears, elk and bats within the Park, and continues to be an integral part of ongoing wildlife monitoring and management efforts.

“We find it very satisfying to have a healthy elk herd. Our job is to help maintain that by giving them the supplies they need,” says Jim Hart, Friends of the Smokies.

Mark Spilman, vice president and general manager for Charter’s operations in the Carolinas and Virginia adds, “The Great Smoky Mountains is the country’s most visited National Park. Many of our own employees that live and work in the region have experienced seeing these majestic animals thrive in Cataloochee. And now, they are officially a ‘Friend of the Smokies.’”

This Christmas holiday was different in many ways here in the Cherokee area and several peoples holiday grew brighter thanks to the Members of the Cherokee Volunteer Fire Department.

Through the months of November and December, donations were being collected of toys, food and clothing by the Cherokee Vol. Fire Dept. members. Four families received food, clothes, and toys that were collected and delivered on both Christmas Eve and Christmas day. On Christmas Eve, the items were delivered to the families with a special guest of the Volunteers...Santa Claus.

Along with the families, toys were delivered to the Cherokee Children’s Home for the children spending their holiday season with us.

“The objective was for us to assist families to have a very Merry Christmas, that were experiencing difficulties this year under the current economic conditions many are faced with,” stated Volunteer Fire Dept. Captain William Roberts. “We received so much clothing we were also able to assist a family in the Qualla fire district, which we were called to that lost everything on Dec. 27. The remaining clothes were donated to a church in the Goose Creek area that provides assistance to needing families.

“Our goal for next year is to collect enough toys and food to assist ten families,” said Capt. Roberts. The families this year and the Volunteer Fire Department related they would like to thank all of those individuals and families that donated the toys, food, clothing, and bicycles.

The officers of the Cherokee Volunteer Fire Department include: Jonah Teesatuskie, Chief; Tyler Taylor, Asst. Chief; and Captains Chris Farmer, William Roberts, and James Armachain.

The Members of the Cherokee Volunteer Fire Department include: Sam Bird, Greg Church, Dereck Driver, Chris Fuller, Dylan Saunooke, Chebon Postoak, Anthony Lee, Zack Winchester, and Reed Maddox.

Cherokee Volunteer Fire Department also announces the death of former member Robert Bigmeat who passed away Jan. 4 at his home in the Wrights Creek community of Cherokee. Robert served several years with the Volunteer department and our Condolences and Prayers go out to his family to comfort them with their loss.

Letter of appreciation

My name is Megan Smith, and I am in my second semester of Graduate Studies at Middle Tennessee State University. While here, I have had the privilege of working with great professors and meeting wonderful people. My previous semester (fall 2013) was a great success, and I could not have done it without the support I have received. The board members of the Richard Yogi Crowe Memorial Scholarship Fund have been very helpful and easily accessible, and I would like to thank you for this relationship.

I am very grateful that the Richard Yogi Crowe Memorial Scholarship Fund has given me another opportunity to be a recipient of this scholarship for Spring 2014. With the funds that I have received, I have been able to take care of many bills and necessities for this semester. So, thank you for alleviating some of the financial stress that is incurred as a graduate student, and I look forward to our continuing relationship.

Thank you,
Megan Smith

Grandma’s bragging rights

My family and I were blessed over the holiday to make a surprise visit to see my grandson Dustin Johnson, a junior at Cherokee High School. Only his mother Winona Johnson, grandma Sally Durant and Coach Tullos knew we were coming. When I walked in the house, followed by his dad Billy, grandpa Frank and uncle Michael, the look on Dustin’s face was priceless. What a moment to remember.

We got to watch two of Dustin’s basketball games, one in which we got to see him receive his trophy for the All-Tournament Team. The games were so exciting, nail biting. I was jumping up out of my seat. Finally got to see in person the Cherokee Braves in action...what a talented bunch of young men. We had awesome Cherokee Braves t-shirts that were made for us with #22 and our names on the back. We know Dustin can play basketball, but wow! He made shots and passes that were amazing. He made a bounce pass with a curve, something we’ve never seen before. We’re still talking about it to everyone here at home. I believe it takes a great coach to get the full potential from a player, and I had the pleasure of meeting Coach Tullos.

I’m so proud of my grandson Dustin, an amazing young man on and off the basketball court. We love him dearly.

Loved Cherokee, a wonderful experience that we will never forget.

Sincerely,
#22’s Grandma Reba
from Tahlequah, Okla.

Thank You

We would like to thank everyone for their prayers, cards, flowers, phone calls, and generous love at the passing of our son, Michael Delaine Hazelwood. Thanks to everyone who made the trip to Cherokee, NC for his funeral and for all the kindness shown to our family during this time of grieving.

A special thanks to Rev. “Bo” Parris, Rev. Dee Hazelwood and the staff of Long House Funeral Home in Cherokee for making this time as easy as possible for our family.

We ask for God’s blessing on you all.

His parents, Phillip Hazelwood and Melody Clark and his children, grandchildren, brothers and sisters

Sign Ordinance Enforcement

In October of 2012, Tribal Ordinance no. 310 was passed in an effort to maintain sign consistency and keep Cherokee as beautiful and inviting as possible. This ordinance is in the process of being implemented. All businesses have the responsibility of complying with the Sign Ordinance in order to hold a business license.

Beginning on February 1st, 2014, all businesses are required to meet with the Planning Office to get their personal assessment of their business signage. Each business’s signage and building requirements are listed under the Cherokee Code’s Sign Ordinance #310, dated 9/16/12, and the Cherokee Business District Master Plan, Resolution #104, dated 12/6/01.

You may contact Planning Coordinator, Kim Deas, at 828-554-6707, or by email at kimdeas@nc-cherokee.com, to schedule your personal assessment meeting and consultation for the month of February. The Planning Office will be using a phased approach to tackle the different sections of downtown and bringing them up to compliance. Once all consultations are complete in February, a final date for compliance will be published in the One Feather. This date is to be expected before the new tourist season.

If you have any further questions or concerns that are not clearly addressed and/or defined above, you may contact Mrs. Deas.
